Subject: Application for Back-End Developer Role – Career Transition

Dear [Hiring Manager's Name],

I am applying for the Back-End Developer role at [Company Name]. I used to be a [Previous Career] and I have now taken up a coding bootcamp that served to polish my back-end programming skills. I would appreciate the opportunity to work with your team in this capacity.

My bootcamp focused on the development of web applications. One of the areas I worked with extensively is called Ruby on Rails and its associated database management tool - PostgreSQL. I especially enjoy talking about the task management application I developed for one of the school projects. It provided an authentication verification for users, an option to conduct advanced searching, and a multi-dimensional database system.

I have a profound interest in back-end programming and there are some innovative approaches to problem solving that I would like to try out within your team. I would be very eager to help implement great ideas at [Company Name].

Thank you for considering my application. Please expect my call as I believe you would be willing to help me understand how your institution operates.

Sincerely,
[Your Name]
